Kristi Noem

@KristiNoem

At least 300,000 illegal immigrants from Venezuela have been encountered at the border. Remember, Venezuela emptied their prisons and told them to come to America.

Far too few have been deported. If we don't want more families grieving like Laken Riley's, that has to change.

The US builds prisons in each country willing to receive illegals that committed non victim crimes in the US.
Trials are carried out remotely, and sentences served in their native country.
Cheaper and inhibits crime in the US.

Blame Trump - Trump signed an executive order deferring the removal of Venezuelans who were at risk of being sent back. He cited the "deteriorative condition" within Venezuela that constitutes a national security threat as the basis for his decision.

By SABRINA RODRIGUEZ 01/19/2021 09:24 PM EST

President Donald Trump on Tuesday announced he will offer Venezuelan exiles protection from deportation, a move he has considered for years but refused to do until his last full day in office.

Trump is using the little-known Deferred Enforced Departure program, or DED, to offer temporary legal status to Venezuelans fleeing the humanitarian crisis brought on by Nicolás Maduro's regime. DED, similar to Temporary Protected Status or TPS, protects recipients from deportation and allows them to get work permits. However, it is granted directly by the president instead of the Department of Homeland Security.

Gosh, I wonder why so many Venezuelans decided to come here...

Based on Trump's memo, the U.S. will defer for 18 months the removal of certain Venezuelan nationals present in the U.S. on Jan. 20. It also allows those Venezuelans to work during that period of time. Jan 19, 2021

President Donald Trump on Tuesday announced he will offer Venezuelan exiles protection from deportation, a move he has considered for years but refused to do until his last full day in office.

Trump is using the little-known Deferred Enforced Departure program, or DED, to offer temporary legal status to Venezuelans fleeing the humanitarian crisis brought on by Nicolás Maduro's regime. DED, similar to Temporary Protected Status or TPS, protects recipients from deportation and allows them to get work permits. However, it is granted directly by the president instead of the Department of Homeland Security.
